FOREST CITY, IA, November 20, 2006 – Winnebago Industries, Inc., a leading United States (U.S) motor home manufacturer, was named to Baseline magazine's "Baseline 500" – an annual ranking of the best corporate managers of information. Winnebago Industries came in at number 84 in this year's ranking.

"Winnebago Industries is honored to be named to the Baseline 500," said Winnebago Industries Chairman of the Board and CEO Bruce Hertzke. "Our information technology department is vital to the success of our organization. The majority of our software is home grown, and we take great pride in developing it to meet our specific needs. We're pleased our IT department and our Company can be recognized for adding business value for our shareholders."

Winnebago Industries was also one of the companies profiled as part of the Baseline 500. To read the complete article, click on <http://www.baselinemag.com/article2/0,1540,2037045,00.asp>.

"The Baseline 500 is truly the ultimate test of information management and recognizes Winnebago Industries' information technology efforts, which have delivered on what matters most: added business value," said John McCormick, editor of Baseline magazine.

Publicly traded companies that make up the Baseline 500 are determined by each company's Information-Value Added score, which is profit left after subtracting the cost of capital invested by shareholders, as well as by Information Productivity, which is Information-Value added divided by a company's cost – selling, general and administrative expense.

Published by Ziff Davis Media, Baseline magazine is a practical guide to costing and managing the deployment of leading-edge information technology.
